

durham it's where

U live

More than 550 UNH
faculty and staff call Durham home.

“I like working in Durham because it’s so easy to get to, and my job at The Out Back has helped me develop as a person and as a career woman.”

—Kyle Macdonald '05
Working on a master’s in English Teaching

Two University of New Hampshire students not only suggested Roger Hayden open a sports-wear shop in downtown Durham, but they found the space for Hayden Sports in 1988. Eleven years later, he bought The Out Back, and between the two stores he employs about nine students a year. “I like having the stores in a college town because it keeps me feeling young. College environments have energy and vitality, and the students represent the future.”

Kyle Macdonald, who is currently working on a master’s degree in English Teaching at UNH after graduating in May, has worked at The Out Back for four years. She is responsible for buying all of the merchandise in the store and says the experience has been invaluable. Working in Durham is also convenient. “No car needed, no commute. And, my friends come in to say hi and I see a lot of my professors, too.”

A partnership between the Durham community and the University of New Hampshire.

www.diwul.org

